

Chair Department of Epidemiology College of Public Health

The University of Nebraska Medical Center, College of Public Health is seeking applications and nominations for the position of Chair of the Department of Epidemiology at the rank of Associate Professor or Professor.

The College of Public Health is committed to delivering high quality education, research, and public service. The department's faculty are currently engaged in interdisciplinary research addressing a range of issues related to cancer; chronic diseases; occupational, injury, environmental, and infectious disease epidemiology.

The College of Public Health has experienced tremendous growth in research and infrastructure since its inception in 2007; including a new College of Public Health building with the anticipation date of completion in 2010. There are numerous opportunities for collaborative work within and outside of the University of Nebraska including Eppley Cancer Center at UNMC, and other academic, governmental and non-governmental organizations.

Candidates should possess a Ph.D. in epidemiology or equivalent; a strong record of academic research and teaching, particularly at the graduate level; a demonstrated capacity to secure external funding to support research; and a compelling vision for an integrated faculty and programs in epidemiology. The candidate should have a capacity for exceptional leadership in an academic setting and be able to foster multidisciplinary collaboration among academic departments and centers both within and outside the University of Nebraska Medical Center.

Applicants should email a letter of application addressed to Shinobu Watanabe-Galloway, Ph.D., Interim Chair, CV, and a list of three (3) professional references to rjaeckel@unmc.edu; phone number 402-559-4248.

Review of applications will continue until suitable candidates are selected and recommended for appointment.

UNMC is an AA/EOE employer.