

RESEARCH EPIDEMIOLOGIST
Premier Program in Neonatology
Connecticut Children's Medical Center
Hartford, CT

The Connecticut Children's Medical Center seeks a PhD-level epidemiologist to support the institution's premier program in Neonatology. As the region's largest tertiary care center in neonatology, the Research Epidemiologist will have access to clinical and research databases from several centers and spanning more than 20 years. He or she will collaborate with translational scientists, clinical faculty and clinician investigators to identify risk factors and opportunities for translational research, treatment outcomes and health services research. Candidates with demonstrated success at obtaining research funding and with a track record of publications in refereed journals will be given preference.

Connecticut Children's Medical Center, the home of the Department of Pediatrics of the University of Connecticut School of Medicine, is a full service academic free-standing children's hospital with outpatient centers throughout the state of Connecticut. The Research Epidemiologist will be eligible for academic appointment in the Department of Pediatrics and will be encouraged to develop collaborations with the University's epidemiologists and biostatisticians.

This is a research position without teaching or supervisory responsibilities beyond research staff. The Research Epidemiologist will have opportunities to teach medical students, residents, fellows and other clinical investigators.

The successful candidate will join an active Department of Research that includes colleagues in biostatistics, master's level epidemiologist/clinical researchers and database management. The Hartford region is centrally located between New York and Boston and offers excellent schools, outstanding cultural and recreational opportunities and a high quality of life. Communities in this area are routinely on national lists of best places.
